The Law and Transition

...What this means for families

In this workshop, Kate will be covering the legal framework that surrounds young people with learning disabilities and their rights to health and social care, further education and housing and look at what this means for young people and families. The workshop will enable attendees to explore some of the common dilemmas that families face when making decisions within the various legal frameworks with or on behalf of young people with learning disabilities, especially within the context of public sector cuts.

This workshop is aimed at families, it is free to attend and lunch will be provided.
